Madam:

I am writing you out of concern the quality & safety of the food supply for my children & grandchildren. This concern involves the feed & medical items give our bird & animal sources of food - namely the antibiotic materials given them.

We are farmers & live do so. The soil & have followed the issues of bio-engineered plants and animals, the Terminator seeds & the whole bit - we feel that there has been too much done - too fast without knowledge of the effects. The precautionary principle has been ignored. I find that people in the European Union are ahead of us in keeping to this principle.

Specifically the antibiotics in animal feed - it is pretty well established that these bodies consumed in meat will cause the same antibiotics to be ineffective in humans. The precautionary principle must be followed here.

I urge the FDA to more immediately to ban use of growth-promoting antibiotics used in human medicine.

Thank you
